USAREUR SOLDIERS' CHORUS

The USAREUR Soldiers' Chorus

The United States Army Europe Soldiers' Chorus is stationed at Tompkins Barracks near Heidelberg, Germany.

The Chorus was organized in 1963 to enhance troop morale through musical performances. The group quickly proved highly successful in advancing relations between the American community in Europe and its host nations, and has captured the hearts of many.

In 1981, the Soldiers' Chorus was attached to the United States Army Europe Band. Unlike their band colleagues, the singers do not enter the military as musicians. Rather, they are selected through competitive auditions from other specialties in the Army and receive intensive training in vocal, dance, and theatrical skills. The ensemble is one of only four full-time choral groups in the Army, and the only one located outside of the continental United States.

The Chorus presents more than 200 performances each year and has appeared in several European countries. Whatever the specific requirement, the men and women of the Band and Soldiers' Chorus continue to represent the best of the United States Army.
